The concentration program in American studies focuses on how American politics, culture, transnationalism and migration impact ongoing change and conflict. A greater understanding of how identity is formed around gender, sexuality, race and ethnicity prepares graduates to be vital assets in civil rights organizations, NGOs, and the political and corporate sectors.

Program Description

The BA program in social and cultural analysis with a concentration in American studies engages in the transdisciplinary and comparative study of the United States as a cultural and political site of ongoing change and conflict. Students learn diverse methods of analyzing nationalist politics; public and private cultural practices; transnationalism; and the nation-making processes of migration, in keeping with the creative and critical scholarship of the discipline. The curriculum also brings attention to identity formations around gender, sexuality, race and ethnicity. As a transdisciplinary field, American studies unites the social sciences, the humanities and the arts, to stimulate students into engaging in rigorous and adventurous conversations about American culture, politics and history. Students explore knowledge beyond disciplinary boundaries by bringing differing perspectives and understandings into dialogue with one another and generating a unique level of intellectual rigor and excitement.
