Career Opportunities

Career opportunities are generally substantive and in high demand. Senior management roles for corporate accountants include chief financial officer positions. Currently, more than half the CFOs at larger corporations have formal accounting training. Projecting into the future, the longer term trend is for CFOs to have extensive corporate accounting training, particularly since CFOs at public U.S. corporations personally sign the financial statements.

Typical early to mid-career positions held by corporate accountants include controllers, treasurers and vice presidents in areas like financial planning, divisional controlling, cost accounting directing, senior financial analysis and senior accounting. These positions typically report to the CFO.

Career examples include but are not limited to those shown in the following list. Advanced degrees or certifications may be required for academic or clinical positions.
