Moment by moment, day by day and person by person, educators ignite minds and strengthen communities. Graduate programs at Mary Lou Fulton Teachers College offer a blend of classroom instruction and professional experiences that prepare you to ask the right questions, navigate uncertainty and make a difference.

Program Description

Degree Awarded: MA Curriculum and Instruction (English as a Second Language)

The MA in curriculum and instruction with an English as a second language concentration prepares students to teach English language learners in a variety of settings, including U.S. schools. The program caters to professionals with a wide range of roles, including both new and experienced teachers, administrators, policymakers and community workers. Graduate students gain strategies to assist their students in developing ESL skills in reading, writing and listening, and they learn how to involve community and families as partners.

The program covers topics such as assessing learners' language development and related strengths and challenges, different frameworks for understanding language acquisition, social aspects of language use, linguistics, literacies and supporting students and their families. Students leave the program with a historical perspective of English learners in the U.S. and on past and current policy toward ESL. Program faculty have worked with English learner students, have a good mix of elementary- and secondary-level foci and are advocates for ESL students.

The program provides coursework in English as a second language required for the endorsement from the Arizona Department of Education, but the content is not Arizona-specific. While the program is an excellent choice for teachers seeking to improve their preparation to work with English learners, it does not lead to teacher certification. There is no requirement that students entering the program hold a teaching certificate or seek to obtain one.

Note: This degree is not the same as the Master of Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages that is offered through the English department.
