Special Education, MA

EDSPEDMA

This program is not accepting applications at this time. Applicants interested in the MA in Special Education program should apply directly to the Applied Behavior Analysis concentration.

The MA program in special education supports practicing professionals improving their skills in PreK-12 and community settings. This is a noncertification degree to advance the capacity of professionals, communities of practice, and school and other service systems to provide education and related services in inclusive and least-restrictive settings.

Program Description

Degree Awarded: MA Special Education

Graduates from the MA program in special education will be able to design and deliver education and related services for populations with diverse needs. The skills developed through this degree program include systematic planning for all individuals, support of positive behavior, and advocacy for new, research-based approaches to education and related services.
