You can explore design as a synergistic process of identifying, analyzing and creating useful, beautiful and stimulating interior environments, and then be prepared to serve the needs of many users. The program provides a cross-disciplinary, practical educational experience in design process and theory with opportunities to work on significant design problems with resident faculty and local practitioners.

Program Description

Degree Awarded: MIA Interior Architecture

The MIA is a studio-based degree that provides a focused experience for students with an undergraduate degree in interior design or architecture. For students without this background, an additional three semesters of study are available.

The MIA is a studio-based professional degree program that prepares graduates to fill leadership positions in interior architecture, design practice and education. Focusing on the development of groundbreaking design solutions to contemporary and emergent societal issues, such as sustainability and health care, this program draws upon history, theory and criticism to inform a transdisciplinary, evidence-based approach. Studios have close ties to the allied disciplines of architecture and landscape architecture, with faculty members from those programs actively involved in teaching studios with an interior architecture concentration. This provides a foundation of transdisciplinary learning to assist in the understanding of integrated practice.

Completion of the MIA degree qualifies a graduate to seek work experience as an interior designer and then sit for the National Council of Interior Design Qualification examination.
