Program Description

Degree Awarded: PHD Gender Studies

The gender studies PhD program is part of the nation's first School of Social Transformation. The diverse community of scholars takes an innovative approach to the study of social justice by uniting multiple academic disciplines to strategically create social change that is democratic, inclusive and just.

The inclusive gender studies doctoral program empowers tomorrow's community leaders and shapers by immersing them in:

- ASU's on-campus Digital Humanities research lab
- creative and critical knowledge production
- deep fluency in feminist theory and practical applications
- publicly engaged academic research
- socially embedded community partnerships

The connections between social locations, community and lived experience are the foundation of the research, teaching and community engagement. Faculty and students explore these intersections from a holistic perspective that goes beyond the classroom.

Additional Curriculum Information

When approved by the student's supervisory committee and the Graduate College, this program allows 30 credit hours from a previously awarded master's degree to be used for this degree. If students do not have a previously awarded master's degree, the 30 hours of coursework will be made up of electives to reach the required 84 credit hours.

Students should see the academic unit for a complete list of approved electives.

The gender studies doctoral program is designed to provide students with the transdisciplinary training in theory and methods needed to conduct original research and scholarship about gender.

Students also take two research methods courses relevant to their dissertation, plus additional courses chosen from three areas of specialization: gender, justice and social change; health, science and technology; and visual and narrative culture.

Students must maintain a 3.20 average GPA (scale is 4.00 = "A") in their courses.

Gender, Justice and Social Change --- Courses in this area explore the gender dimension of social structures, institutions and organizations; the processes of social change and community development; and the ways policies and laws can change gender relations. Faculty have expertise in:

- child welfare
- domestic violence
- gender and the biophysical environment
- globalization
- immigration
- labor and employment
- social policy
- sustainability
- transnational feminisms
- women's rights and gender equality in the developing world

Health, Science and Technology --- Courses in this area explore the impact of gender on:
• health care
• health occupations
• science and technology

Faculty have expertise in:

• bioethics
• gender and technology
• health and sexuality
• HIV and AIDS prevention
• the participation of women in math and science in the developing world
• women's roles as healers and caregivers

Visual and Narrative Culture --- Courses in this area explore historical and contemporary representations of gender in all genres, including:

• art
• literature
• popular culture
• scientific, medical, historical and legal discourse
• theater

The faculty focus especially on the intersections of gender representations with representations of race, sexuality and class, and the ways in which representations produce rather than simply mimic gender inequality and polarized identities.

Admission Requirements

Applicants must fulfill the requirements of both the Graduate College and the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.

The gender studies program welcomes applications from qualified students without regard to race, creed, color, religion, sex or national origin. Applicants are eligible to apply to the program if they have earned a bachelor's or master's degree, in any field, from a regionally accredited institution.
