Emergency Management and Homeland Security (Biosecurity and Threat Management), MA

Currently ranked No. 1 by U.S. News & World Report, this program prepares you to be an agile, results-driven leader in emergency management and public safety. The degree is customizable, with community resilience and disaster management courses, electives, and five concentration options --- to fit your unique goals.

Program Description

Degree Awarded: MA Emergency Management and Homeland Security (Biosecurity and Threat Management)
Biosecurity and threat management is an important and emerging area related to the intersection of homeland security, public health and risk management. It addresses a unique set of hazard and threat management issues related to bioterrorism, agroterrorism and communicable disease threats associated with disaster incidents. The biosecurity and threat management concentration within the MA program in emergency management and homeland security degree is designed to assist professional development aimed at meeting these types of current and emerging challenges. Some of the coursework in this concentration area is offered through the University of New South Wales (Australia) as part of the PLuS alliance program.

The EMHS program's students serve and promote stronger and more resilient communities across public, private or nonprofit sector organizations. The program emphasizes a blended approach of practical knowledge and broader integrative thinking about the complex societal challenges of the 21st century. Its core values of collaboration between practitioners, faculty and students, public service, commitment to diversity, critical thinking and evidence-based assessment are all central to promoting informed and effective leadership.
